WAR NOTICES

Steel Helmets and Civilian Duty Respirators

Following representations by the British Medical Association the Government has now agreed to make steel helmets (Grade 2) and civilian duty respirators available to all medical practitioners on application. Some practitioners are now in possession of steel helmets or civilian duty respirators, or both. This provision applies only to practitioners who are not already provided with helmets or respirators.

The procedure is for each practitioner not already provided with a helmet or respirator to apply in writing before Saturday, September 14, to the secretary of the Local Medical War Committee for his area giving the following particulars: (1) Name in full. (2) Address. (3) What is wanted—helmet, respirator, or both. (4) Size in hats, if helmet is wanted. (5) Size of civilian duty respirator, if this is required. (The respirator is made in two sizes, normal and small. Most men, and some women, require the normal size, but wherever there is doubt the local A.R.P. headquarters may be asked to advise. It is essential that each applicant should state whether the normal or the small size of respirator is required.) (6) Each applicant for a steel helmet should state that he does not already possess a helmet. Each applicant for a civilian duty respirator should state that he does not already possess such a respirator. The helmets and respirators are intended for the doctor's own use only.

Payment.—Each application should be accompanied by a remittance, 7s. for a helmet and 7s. 6d. for a respirator. Cheques should be made payable to the Secretary of the Local Medical War Committee. Please write to him and do not ring him up.

These arrangements apply to all practitioners in England, Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland.

The Minister of Health has under consideration the question of a further issue of steel helmets and civilian duty respirators to: (1) hospital staffs whose needs have not yet been fully met, including stretcher-bearers; (2) midwives and district nurses; and (3) relieving officers who are required to open the special relief stations.

Delays

There has been considerable delay in dealing with two important matters, and in neither case is the Central Medical War Committee or the British Medical Association responsible. The first is in connexion with the revised terms and conditions of service for practitioners enrolled in the E.M.S. or treating E.M.S. patients under the occupied-bed arrangements. When the occupied-bed arrangements were introduced in November last the Ministry of Health agreed that the terms and conditions of service should be reviewed by the end of June, 1940. On June 8 the Advisory E.M.S. Committee put forward to the Ministry new proposals under this heading. The Ministry received representatives of the committee to discuss these on July 11, but owing to protracted discussions it was not until August 9 that the Ministry's counterproposals were received. These were considered at a special meeting of the Advisory Committee on August 13, the committee's comments being conveyed to the Ministry on August 14. No further indication of the Ministry's attitude has yet been received, although the committee has been informed that the Ministry propose to obtain some statistical evidence so as to do justice to one or two of the proposals which have been advanced by the committee. The Advisory E.M.S. Committee is aware of the dissatisfaction which exists on this subject, and it is only fair to state that its proposals for dealing with the situation as from July 1 were put forward as early as June 8. The revised terms of service will be retrospective from July 1.

The Central Medical War Committee is still awaiting the Ministry's estimate of children covered by the unaccompanied children arrangement for the quarter ending June 30 and for the cheque in payment for medical services rendered. Payment will be made to Local Medical War Committees within forty-eight hours of receiving the cheque. The Ministry has been asked on a number of occasions to expedite the calculation and the payment of the money now considerably overdue.

Medical Care of Home Guard

The following letter has been sent by the Central Medical War Committee to Local Medical War Committees in England and Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland:

"A number of inquiries have been received from Local Medical War Committees and individual practitioners as to the part the medical profession can play in association with the Home Guard. Realizing the widespread desire that exists among our profession to help in the work of this great voluntary movement, the Central Medical War Committee and the Council of the British Medical Association decided to offer to the War Office, on behalf of the medical profession, to provide through volunteers the essential first-aid treatment of battle casualties and injuries sustained by members of the Home Guard while on duty, no charge being made for this medical work. It is believed that the offer of service in these terms will meet with the general approval of the profession. The War Office gratefully accepted the offer.

The machinery suggested is as follows. There is given below the name and address of the Territorial Association covering your area. It is suggested that your Local Medical War Committee, through its honorary secretary, should establish contact with the Territorial Association at this address and in consultation with them decide the number and location of the medical practitioners desired for the purpose of providing this medical attention.

It is suggested that the territory under the aegis of the Territorial Association should be divided into areas in accordance with the Home Guard organization, there being obtained by the Local Medical War Committee for each area a volunteer medical practitioner who agrees to be on call for the purpose of providing initial first-aid treatment for members of the Home Guard injured by enemy action or otherwise whilst on duty. The War Office has already communicated with Territorial Associations, who are now ready to enter into the necessary discussions.

It will be noted that the offer is clearly defined and limited to the treatment of the Home Guard whilst on duty."

Certificates for War Service Injuries

It has been asked whether the books of certificates issued to the profession at the outbreak of war for use in war injury cases should be used for war service injuries—for example, injuries sustained by whole-time air raid personnel while on duty. The answer is in the affirmative, despite the statement on the cover of the book of certificates limiting their use to war injury cases only.

CERTIFICATES FOR THE SUPPLY OF MILK UNDER THE NATIONAL MILK SCHEME

The Ministry of Food has drawn the attention of the British Medical Association to the fact that in some instances practitioners are charging a fee for the completion of the certificates referred to in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the form of application for the supply of milk at twopence a pint or free of cost. This question has been considered by the Executive Committee of the Association, and practitioners are recommended not to charge a fee for the completion of these certificates.

The Paddington Resolution

SIR,—The resolution of the Paddington Medical Society with the discussions which preceded it (Supplement, July 27, p. 8) merits some note if only for the fact that one of its supporters was Sir Ernest Graham-Little. One would have expected him, if not to know, at least to guess, that the financial straits of the majority of those among us who have been adversely affected by the war could not be solved by still further increasing the numbers on medical boards or by multiplying the number of boards.

1. The boards must, in the course of a very short time, die a natural death, as the manhood of Britain is not inexhaustible so far as recruiting for the Forces is concerned. A further dilution of the medical boards will only increase the number of poverty-stricken practitioners without increasing the prosperity of any. As an "appeal to the gallery"—that is, those outside the boards—the resolution may be effective but cannot, in the nature of things, solve the problem of those who require immediate help.

2. Sir Ernest's argument that this is not the time to demand an increase in the capitation fee could be justified only if the principle of equal sacrifice were adopted by all sections of the community. But while my 22-year-old patient, a general non-skilled labourer, who earned less than £3 a week before the war, is now exempt from military service and is earning £7 a week while on day work and £9 a week on night work; while aviation companies and others are paying 45% dividends; while the cost of living is up appreciably, it is unfair to preach to the medical profession on their civic duties (which Sir Ernest's remarks imply). The future organization and remuneration of the profession can be left temporarily to debaters, while a war bonus on the same principle as for factory workers would at least temporarily and effectively alleviate distress.—I am, etc.,

London, E.16, Aug. 16. D. G. DE BOUK.

Supply of Practitioners in Australia

SIR,—Your reference to Sir James Barrett's article (Supplement, July 20, p. 5) may mislead some unfortunate to take up a position at £500 a year. A single man might just cover his living expenses, but a married man would not save anything under an income of £1,000 a year. The deficiency lies not in the supply but in the reward. An up-country practice may conjure up visions of beautiful surroundings, congenial companionship, etc. Hot, sandy, and treeless, the Australian township, so called, is often only a store, a public house, and a bank, with three or more shanties in a main street. The district to be covered is sparsely populated by selectors here and there, often on the "bread-line." Sir James Barrett wants medical officers for Bush hospitals—no doubt a worthy object—but why ask medical men to act as missionaries on a starvation wage and in most uncongenial surroundings?—I am, etc.,
